

Changing or leaving your course – your questions answered

If you're thinking of changing or leaving your course, it's important that you know how to access the right support and advice. These commonly asked questions should provide you with the direction you need and help you to identify the best people to speak with.

Our sections cover;

Important considerations

Changing your course

Leaving or suspending your course

UCAS applications

Finance, fees and funding

Accommodation

Employment

Important considerations

- Does my tutor need to know that I'm thinking about changing or leaving my course?
- What will employers think if I change or leave my course?
- Will I get any qualifications for the time I've spent studying?
- What will an employer think of the new subject I am planning to study?

Does my tutor need to know that I'm thinking about changing or leaving my course?

A conversation that you have with any member of staff in the Careers Service or Student Services is not disclosed to academic staff as we offer a confidential service to all students. It can be beneficial, however, to share your concerns with your Personal Tutor as they may be able to advise and direct you to relevant sources of support or reassure you about future course content. You may also want to talk to a Careers Consultant about how to approach the subject with your tutor.

What will employers think if I change or leave my course?

Don't assume employers will view your choice negatively. Employers will respond to your situation based on the information they have available. It is therefore sensible to present your change of course in a positive way. How you do this will depend on your own circumstances, but you could show an understanding of self-awareness, responsibility, research skills and decision-making ability in presenting how you took this choice.

You may want to discuss how you present this information to an employer with a Careers Consultant.

Will I get any qualifications for the time I've spent studying?

This depends on how long you have been studying. If you completed a full year passing 120 credits and were due to progress to stage 2, you will be eligible for a Higher Education Certificate (CertHE). If you have completed 2 years of study, passing 240 credits, you would be eligible for a Higher Education Diploma (DipHE).

Contact the University's Student Progress team for further advice on this.

What will an employer think of the new subject I am planning to study?

Employers value both your subject knowledge and the skills and experience you gain as a student. Many employers will recruit students from any degree course, placing emphasis on how you have used your initiative and time at university. They want you to demonstrate the appropriate attitudes and transferable skills relevant to the opportunities advertised.

The 'What can I do with my degree?' information on the Prospects website can also be a useful resource to help you to identify these skills and think about career options where your degree would be useful.

Changing your course

- How do I research other courses to apply for?
- If I change course, how can I ensure I make the best choice?
- What should I say when contacting an admissions tutor for a course I am interested in studying?
- How do I go about changing course at Newcastle?
- Can I go straight into the 2nd year?
- Do I need to sit and/or pass my exams to change course?
- How late in the academic year can I change course?
- Should I consider studying part-time?
- Will I be able to transfer to another course at Newcastle as a PARTNERS student?
- I like some aspects of my course – can I change to Combined Honours?

How do I research other courses to apply for?

If you are keen to study an alternative course at university, the UCAS Undergraduate-What to Study website offers useful advice, including an easy-to-use course-search tool. If you need a more flexible study option, then Find Courses allows you to search for part-time, evening and virtual courses, in both further and higher education. This site also allows you to search for vocational courses and apprenticeships.

If you know where you want to study, most universities and colleges will have an online prospectus or details of courses on their website. A degree apprenticeship could be another option to consider, allowing you to study while in paid employment.

If I change course, how can I ensure I make the best choice?

The UCAS website has useful advice in its ‘What to study’ section. Examining the course content, assessment methods and skills developed from the course are just some of the things to consider. Talking ideas through confidentially with a Careers Consultant can help you examine the implications of any course change and help you to feel more confident about your decisions.

What should I say when contacting an admissions tutor for a course I am interested in studying?

It is essential that you are able to explain positively your decision to change course. An admissions tutor will want to talk with you about why you now feel this is the best course for you. Focus on issues such as what interests you about the course and why you will be successful at it, rather than what is wrong with your current course. It can be useful to first discuss how you might approach this discussion with a Careers Consultant.

How do I go about changing course at Newcastle?

Speak to the Degree Programme Director (DPD) of the course you wish to transfer to and the DPD of your current course. Be aware that if you are looking to change course at Newcastle, it will be at the discretion of the DPD of the course you’re looking to join. If in agreement, the respective DPDs then sign the appropriate transfer request forms and manage the process on your behalf.

The University’s Student Progress team can support you with further advice on this process.

Can I go straight into Stage 2?

Much will depend on whether the course you are transferring to is similar in nature to your current course. If there are no similarities you will normally be required to start from Stage 1. To move into Stage 2 you will be expected to have passed an appropriate number of credits from the previous year. We recommend that you discuss what is expected of you with the admissions tutor for the course you want to move to.

Do I need to sit and/or pass my exams to change course?

This will depend on your circumstances and the course and stage you are moving to. If you are looking to start a new subject from the first year, this is less likely to be a requirement. If you are transferring to a similar subject, you might be expected to show your success in exams. If you are progressing to the next year of a similar course, you will be expected to have passed the appropriate number of credits from your previous year.

We recommend that you discuss what is expected of you with the admissions tutor for the course you want to move to.

How late in the academic year can I change course?

In theory you can change course at any time, but you may have to wait for the start of a new academic year to change to a different subject. Usually at Newcastle University, it becomes difficult to change onto another course after the first few weeks of teaching, to ensure you don't fall behind with your modules. It depends on how similar your new course is to your current one and whether you want to stay within the same year or start again.

You may need to consider the financial implications of staying on or leaving your course:

- if you withdraw or suspend during term 1, you will be charged 25% of the total academic year's fee
- if you withdraw or suspend during term 2, you will be charged 50% of the total academic year's fee
- if you withdraw or suspend during term 3, you will be charged 100% of the total academic year's fee

Visit the University's Student Financial Support pages for further information. This team also have useful information on the financial implications of withdrawing from your course on their website. You can also contact the Student Financial Support team directly at student.fin-supp@ncl.ac.uk or visit their Appointments & Drop-ins page for 1:1 support.

Should I consider studying part-time?

Studying part-time could be a consideration, but which mode of study you adopt will, in part, depend on your own circumstances and what institutions have available. You will find that many institutions and some disciplines find it difficult to accommodate part-time study, so it is important that you are realistic when you research this option.

If you are looking to transfer your studies at Newcastle from full-time to part-time, you need to seek approval and permission from your Degree Programme Director who will be required to inform the University's Student Progress team.

Part-time courses are studied over a longer period of time than their full-time equivalents; students spend fewer hours per week in a classroom allowing time to balance part-time employment or other commitments.

Will I be able to transfer to another course at Newcastle as a PARTNERS student?

If you joined the university through the PARTNERS scheme, you will continue to be considered a PARTNERS student by the University, even if you move to another course at Newcastle. However, if you are looking to change course, it is at the discretion of the Degree Programme Director for the course you want to join, to decide what grades are required. On the whole, academics view PARTNERS students favourably but they may look at your marks or general university progress when making a decision.

For more advice on changing course as a PARTNERS student, contact the Student Recruitment team.

I like some aspects of my course – can I change to Combined Honours?

There is a finite list of subjects that can be studied as a Combined Honours programme; it is not possible to study a combination outside of this list. Studying a Combined Honours programme is a challenging alternative, but it could be possible to transfer over if you can demonstrate commitment and some current academic success at university.

Students need to pass 40 credits of study in an academic subject to progress to stage 2 in that subject, so those transferring after some time at university in single honours are likely to have to start the new subject(s) at stage 1.

You might find it helpful to visit the Combined Honours website and read the information before discussing your interest further with the Combined Honours team. If this option appeals to you, it is important that you are able to demonstrate why you feel a Combined Honours programme is a more appropriate choice for you.

Leaving or suspending your course

- What should I do if I want to leave the university?
- How do I suspend or postpone my studies?
- Can the Careers Service support me to appeal having to leave my course?

What should I do if I want to leave the university?

You are advised to speak with a Careers Consultant who will be able to discuss with you alternative options to studying at Newcastle. You must also speak to your Personal Tutor who will ask you to complete a withdrawal questionnaire which is then sent to the University's Student Progress team.

How do I suspend or postpone my studies?

Refer back to your Student Handbook and use your Personal Tutor as the starting point – they will be able to advise you about the various University procedures. It can be confusing, as there are different procedures depending on your particular circumstances. Your school will guide you in the right direction.

Can the Careers Service support me to appeal having to leave my course?

The Careers Service can help you examine alternative options to your current studies, but if you are unhappy about the university's decision to ask you to leave your course then you should seek further advice from the Student Advice Centre in the Students' Union.

UCAS applications

- Can I apply for another course at Newcastle without going through UCAS?
- Do I have to apply through UCAS if I want to study at another university?
- How do I apply through UCAS if I am a current university student?
- Do I need a reference? Who should write the reference?

Can I apply for another course at Newcastle University without going through UCAS?

A programme transfer onto another course at Newcastle often happens without needing to go through UCAS. You will need to speak to your Personal Tutor or Degree Programme Director (DPD), as well as a tutor or DPD for the course you want to move to in order to understand whether you will be able to transfer directly without going through UCAS.

Do I have to apply through UCAS if I want to study at another university?

Yes, you will normally be required to make an application via UCAS if you want to change university. However, we would recommend making contact with the admissions tutor for the course(s) you are interested in first, to discuss your suitability, demonstrate your interest and clarify how they want you to apply. If you decide to change university during the summer, you should contact the institution directly as the UCAS application process for the academic year will have closed. If you are applying for courses at other universities during the summer period, you may also want to research opportunities offered through the UCAS Clearing programme.

How do I apply through UCAS if I am a current university student?

If you decide to reapply, you'll need to submit a new application through the UCAS website (you will not be able to reuse your previous UCAS application).

Do I need a reference? Who should write the reference?

You will need a reference unless you contact all of the universities you are applying to and all agree that no reference is required. Your reference should be someone who knows you academically- as a current or recent student that is likely to be a tutor from your course or a teacher from your school or college. Who you choose will depend on how long you have been a university student and who can best comment on your academic ability. You may want to discuss your choice of reference with an admissions tutor for the course(s) you are applying to or with a Careers Consultant. For further information, see advice on references from the UCAS website.

Finance, fees and funding

- At what point can I leave and receive a refund on my fees?
- What fees will I have to pay if I transfer to another course?
- If I repeat a year, what fees will I pay and what financial support am I entitled to?
- If I leave my course, when do I start paying off my student loan?
- What happens to any bursary or scholarship I have received?

At what point can I leave and receive a refund on my fees?

If you decide that you wish to withdraw from your programme of study at Newcastle, the amount of tuition fees you will be liable to pay will depend on the term in which you withdraw or suspend. Visit the University's Student Financial Support pages for further information. This team also have useful information on the financial implications of withdrawing from your course on their website. You can also contact the Student Financial Support team directly at student.fin-supp@ncl.ac.uk or visit their Appointments & Drop-ins page for 1:1 support.

What fees will I have to pay if I transfer to another course?

It depends on whether you remain at this University or move to another one. Each student's entitlement will vary depending on their individual circumstances. We recommend contacting the Student Financial Support team by visiting their Appointments & Drop-ins page. You can also seek advice from the Student Union's Student Advice Centre.

If I leave my course, when do I start paying off my student loan?

HMRC will look at your tax records and see if your income has reached the current level for repayment- check current levels for repaying Undergraduate and Postgraduate student loans on the Gov.UK website. If it has, you will then be liable to start paying off your loan.

If you withdraw from your course you will need to notify your assessment authority, e.g. Student Finance England. They will calculate what loan and grant you were eligible to receive based on your attendance. If you withdraw part-way through the year, you may find that you have been overpaid some of the grant and/or loan. If an overpayment occurs, then you will usually be asked to repay this straight away. You will repay any student loan you received in the normal way, i.e. in the April after you have left the course and when you are earning above the threshold. Visit the University's Student Financial Support pages and their information on the financial implications of withdrawing from your course for further information.

What happens to any bursary or scholarship I have received?

If you leave your course, you will usually have to pay back some of the money given to you through awards and bursaries that are not considered a loan. This will usually be based on the length of time you were expected to study and the amount of time you actually spent as a student at the University. Each grant-awarding body will have their own rules on this, so find out from your bursary or scholarship provider what their policy is, e.g. your Newcastle University Bursary or Achievement Bursary will be cancelled if you withdraw before these bursaries have been paid. If you withdraw after these bursaries have been paid, you will not be asked to repay either of these bursaries. Visit the University's Student Financial Support pages and their information on the financial implications of withdrawing from your course for further information.

Accommodation

- If I leave my course, what happens with my university accommodation?
- Are there any circumstances in which I can stay in my university accommodation until the end of the year?
- Can I still live in privately rented accommodation with other students, after I have left?

If I leave my course, what happens with my university accommodation?

The University's Accommodation Service is available to advise you on all aspects of your accommodation.

If you withdraw from the University and are living in University accommodation, you will be charged the full rent on your room for the term. You will normally only be released from this if the room is re-let to another student (a 'successor'), who is not already committed to University accommodation. Under the terms of your contract, responsibility for finding a suitable replacement tenant lies with you. The Accommodation Service will make every effort to help you find a replacement tenant and reduce your liability; however, this cannot be guaranteed.

Please note it is your responsibility to inform the Accommodation Service of your intention to withdraw. Neither your academic school nor Student Progress would automatically notify the Accommodation Service should your circumstances change.

You may want to consider contacting the Student Advice Centre in the Students' Union for issues contractual issues relating to your tenancy if you are living in private accommodation.

Are there any circumstances in which I can stay in my university accommodation until the end of the year?

Everybody's circumstances will be different. It is therefore important that you talk directly with the Accommodation Service.

Can I still live in privately rented accommodation with other students, after I have left?

For advice on your rights as a private tenant, you can book an appointment with a Housing Adviser at the Student Advice Centre in the Students' Union. The University's Accommodation Service may also be able to support you with information about rented accommodation.

Employment

- How should I present changing or leaving my course on my CV?
- Should I mention it in my cover letter?
- What opportunities are available if I don't have a degree?

How should I present changing or leaving my course on my CV?

Employers will often spot gaps in education or employment on a CV, so it is usually wise to account for that time. Use dates to clarify when you were studying at a specific institution. Highlight the skills you acquired or the relevant knowledge you developed as part of any course or module you studied. Describing your reasons for changing or leaving a course may be more appropriate for a covering letter than a CV. If you'd like to chat further about how to present this positively to an employer, you may find it useful to speak to a member of the Careers Service.

Should I mention it in my covering letter?

A covering letter can be used to effectively outline your reasons for changing or leaving your course, giving you more opportunity to explain your decision than a CV does. Aim to present your decision in a positive way, perhaps highlighting your decision-making and research skills, as well as your self-awareness. It can be positive to demonstrate that you can recognise a dilemma, weigh up your options and take a decision, rather than pretend the problem isn't there and carry on regardless. Aim to show what you have gained from taking responsibility and addressing this issue. If you'd like to chat further about how to present this positively to an employer, you may find it useful to speak to a member of the Careers Service.

What opportunities are available if I don't have a degree?

The National Careers Service offers impartial information, advice and guidance to help you make decisions on learning, training and work opportunities.

Apprenticeships are a great way to train on the job and gain qualifications with a partner university or college while getting paid. You can apply for degree apprenticeships at level 6 (bachelors) and level 7 (masters). Gov.UK, Careermap and notgoingtouni have details of advertised positions and it may also be worthwhile researching employers as some vacancies may appear on an employer's own website.

Volunteering is also a great way to learn more about an organisation, prove your capabilities and make useful contacts to assist you in your job search.