CONFERENCES

Ancient Conceptions of Music
Interdisciplinary Workshop
Organised by David Creese (Classics, Newcastle) and Pierre Destrée (Philosophy, Louvain)

Newcastle, 6-7 April 2017

The specific questions we have asked speakers to focus on are those which philosophers of music explicitly ask nowadays (but which have not been investigated in any concerted way by classicists or ancient philosophers): What is musical pleasure? What value does enjoyment of music bring to human life? What does the description ‘beautiful’ amount to, and how should we understand emotions, in the case of music?

This is the second of a pair of conferences (the first held in Louvain in December 2016), organised in the form of workshops with plenty of time for discussion. Essential to both events is the involvement of scholars whose discourses do not often intersect, particularly classicists approaching antiquity as a ‘song culture’, and ancient philosophers. The Newcastle conference will open with a framing discussion led by a contemporary philosopher of aesthetics and music, Nick Zangwill (Hull). Jerrold Levinson (Maryland) did this for the Louvain meeting. The two are prominent proponents of opposing approaches to the fundamental questions which we are posing of the texts and visual arts of Greek and Roman antiquity. Their contributions are thus especially important to the discussion and its theoretical background.

The keynote speaker, Anastasia-Erasmia Peponi, has written extensively on ancient aesthetics (e.g. Frontiers of Pleasure: Models of Aesthetic Response in Archaic and Classical Thought, OUP 2012) and on performance culture and ancient philosophy (e.g. Performance and Culture in Plato’s Laws, CUP 2013).
