Paragraphing: Structure

Topic sentence:
Introduction of the paragraph's main idea.
Could be an observation to be interpreted or an argument to be evidenced.

Main body in which the initial assertion is developed and explained.

Conclusion to be drawn from the above points.

Keyword (old)

Signpost word

Keyword (new)

Self-assessment can also develop skills which make a student more attractive to prospective employers. Employers value students with skills in self-assessment because these types of skills are relevant to a wide range of employment contexts. They want graduates who can accurately assess their own competencies in performing tasks. Students who can do this are well places to take on responsibilities and adapt readily to roles in workplaces. The value in developing these types of assessment can be seen to go beyond meeting immediate educational needs.