As you prepare to join the Business School and the University there are many things you will need to know so we are providing this induction online for you to look at before you join us. This will ensure you are better prepared once you arrive.

1. University Orientation – “Build Your New”
This is a set of online units that take you through some important points you will need to know about the University. Once you are registered and have access to Canvas you should work through these required units, checking them off as you complete them. These materials will remain available for you to refer back to at any point in your academic journey with us. The units include the following:

- Welcome from the University and the Newcastle University Student’s Union (NUSU).
- Digital Learning for Postgraduates is an essential unit that tells you about the systems, services and apps you will need (including Canvas), as well as digital etiquette, accessibility and inclusion.
- Student Life covers key things relating to Covid health and safety, the Student Charter, expectations, respect and behaviours towards others.
- Student Support and Guidance will introduce you to the range of services on campus such as Learning, Welfare and Counselling support, finance, and careers but also gives you an introduction to the University Library and Study Skills that you will follow up with later in the Extended Induction.
- Academic Guidance and Support for Postgraduates introduces you to the role of the Personal Tutor and explores assessment and learning and your readiness for postgraduate learning especially your readiness for independent learning.
- A section especially for international students covering health and wellbeing, legal issues such as visas, as well as language support available.

You should also aim to complete your registration before you arrive on campus if you have not already done so.
2. Business School Orientation

It is important for you to understand the core values of the Business School and the learning environment we aim to create. Before you arrive it will be helpful for you to spend time working though the materials on Canvas so you can join us ready to engage fully in your learning journey. You will need to be a fully registered student and have received (and activated) your “Welcome email” from LinkedIn Learning to access some of these materials. Please check your NUBS email for this.

The School’s Pre-Induction Orientation includes:

- School Welcome: Professor Matthew Brannan, Deputy Director - Education & Recruitment, will welcome you to the Business School.

- Senior Tutor Welcome (for each programme area): Here you will learn how we support our students to succeed in this welcome talk from your Senior Tutor. You will hear about our Business School Wellbeing Team and services offered. You will also find out how you can contribute to student representation at the School.

- On Your Way: Introduction to the Careers and Employability Team: Join our Careers Consultants who will provide an outline of the resources and support available to you both here in the Business School as well as across the wider University. They will also provide an overview of the exciting employability-led events, workshops and resources on offer as well as a step-by-step guide to accessing one-to-one support throughout your studies and beyond.

- Inclusion, Diversity and Confronting Bias: As you begin your Masters’ journey (and as you enter the workforce), you will encounter issues of inclusion and diversity in all its forms. To help you understand and navigate inclusion and diversity, this activity provides some insights about how you can help build an inclusive environment with your peers. It aims to help you understand your unconscious biases and suggests some ways we can each address these and how we can counter bias in our words and actions.

- Developing Your Cross-Cultural Intelligence: This activity is provided for you to undertake before or shortly after you arrive in Newcastle. As a global Business School with students from over 60 countries we believe it is essential for all students to understand how to build their cross-cultural intelligence as preparation for studying with us, as well as for the future. This learning unit has been developed drawing on professional and practical materials from LinkedIn Learning. It introduces you to working across cultures as well as providing you with a self-assessment and a practical planning tool to help you develop your capabilities.

- Working in Virtual Teams: This activity is provided for you to undertake before or shortly after you arrive in Newcastle. As a global Business School preparing students to fully engage with the world of work, we know from our employers that a key to success is being able to work in a team – and increasingly that means in a virtual team. Many of you will engage in teamworking as part of your learning and assessment and this unit has been developed drawing on professional and practical materials from LinkedIn Learning to develop your awareness and effectiveness in working in teams.

Next Steps: Your Transition to Learning

As you begin your studies you will find there are times when you need to dip into specialist learning resources or support. The University has made a range of these available on Canvas to assist you when you are ready. These include resources provided though our Academic Skills Kit (known as "ASK", as well as the Writing Development Centre (or the "WDC"). Some important ones to focus on in the first few weeks as you transition to learning are:

- Good academic practice and referencing appropriately
- Academic writing and critical thinking
- Making the most of the Library resources for your studies, including helpful tips on searching for books, e-books and journal articles and links to the Business resources via the Library.

The International Business Management programme expects you to have completed all of the units in the School’s Pre-Induction as you will build on this in your Semester 1 modules. In addition, the programme provides an Extended Induction via a non-credit bearing module (NBS8993 Academic Mentoring) designed to ease you into postgraduate study in the business and management field. It provides academic mentoring through focusing on topics such as critical thinking, teamworking and developing cultural competence.
